Language is a great asset and priceless property of a nation. That's why loving our mother tongue, studying it carefully, keeping it crystal clear, perfecting it is a symbol of our incomparable love for our national language, our motherland, our dear Motherland. Language connects generations to generations, centuries to centuries, because the spirit of us and our ancestors, which you cannot imagine, is embedded in this mother tongue. Even a new born baby rests by listening to it in his native language, we are proud of it every morning when we hear the National Anthem broadcasted on television and radio waves in our native language.

In linguistics, in most cases, phrases are considered as phraseological units. It is not without reason that the national-cultural problems of the phraseological system have become the object of research of many linguists. This can be explained by the attention and interest in the problem of "Language and culture" in recent years, as well as the development of modern linguistics in the anthropological paradigm. Taking into account the mutual and close connection of language with a person, the need to apply the theory of anthropological linguistics to the phraseological system is a natural and important reality

In every language, idioms are part of speech. For this purpose, it is important to learn the tools of communication, their use, phrases and figurative expressions. Phraseological expressions in Italian, as in any other language, are an important subject of research and have been studied by many linguists until now.

Phrases are an integral part of everyday speech. That is why the study of phraseology has accelerated today. Because using a single phrase, a person can express his impressions, inner experiences, and his thoughts consisting of several words. Phraseologisms are very different in meaning. There can be phrases that indicate the state of a person, that is, the state of being in a happy and depressed mood, or else they can be phrases that give advice. Studying phraseologisms not only in terms of meaning, but also their components is very interesting for the researcher. Because the components themselves can be semantically divided into several directions. For example, somatisms, i.e. human body parts, can participate in the component of phraseologism. Or else, phraseologisms involving kitchen items, phraseologisms involving natural phenomena. So, the components of phraseologism can be different
